19  About She’s Next, Empowered by Visa
Executive Summary

A critical part of Visa’s mission is to enable individuals, business and economies to thrive. One of the biggest contributors to economic health comes in the form of small to medium business (SMB) owners. Together, they form a global network connected to each other by virtue of their desire to pursue their passions, make a difference or own their own destiny.

Small businesses are also the backbone of local economies around the world. They are the biggest employers, job creators and contributors to the national GDP. In fact, the small business community in the U.S. contributes approximately $8.5 trillion to the economy. Within the SMB world, women-owned businesses make up nearly half the U.S. market, employing millions and generating trillions in sales each year.

This research is designed to take the national pulse of female small business owners: the goals they aim toward, the challenges they face and what motivates them most. It also double-clicks into Atlanta-based women business owners, the site of Visa’s inaugural, She’s Next, Empowered by Visa, event for female business owners.

To us, championing female-owned small businesses means helping them overcome the hurdles they face. This research helped us define those hurdles and our approach to action, including:

• Uncovering women’s business-oriented motivations and biggest challenges by interviewing 650 female small business owners, nationwide.

• Determining top concerns, and educational and support needs for those female business owners, and begin to host a series of events to offer solutions and opportunities to learn.

• Finding subject matter experts to share insights and deliver the resources needed.

As a leader in digital payments for more than 60 years, Visa has a tremendous opportunity to enable economic growth and strengthen economies, while also helping to improve lives and create a better world. We are truly inspired to encourage women small business owners as they build, sustain and advance their small businesses.
Motivations for Starting Businesses and Challenges Faced

The global rate of female entrepreneurship has been increasing more quickly than that of male entrepreneurs, with more than 163 million women around the world starting a business since 2014. There is no simple answer as to what is driving this increase, but when asked about their motivations, women had a lot to say about societal factors, personal motivators and challenges they face.

Women set out to pursue their passion, achieve financial independence and flexibility.

Top Motivators for Starting a Business

- Pursue Passion: 48%
- Financial Independence: 43%
- Flexibility: 41%
- Make More Money: 36%
- Better Work/Family Balance: 32%
- Create Own Environment: 27%

79% of American female entrepreneurs feel more empowered now than they did five years ago.

\(^{1}\)2016/2017 Global Entrepreneurship Monitor
When starting their own business, women said they face challenges centered on strategy development, finding the right tools and dealing with the competition.

Strategy and Operational Challenges

- 37% Assembling a good team
- 36% Finding the tools to grow and manage my business
- 36% Dealing with the competition
- 33% Growing as fast as I needed
- 29% Raising capital/funding
- 28% Developing an online presence

Other Challenges

- 23% Building a support network
- 11% Implementing a payment system
- 8% Cybersecurity
The majority of women report that it was difficult to obtain the funding they needed to start their own business.

61% Self-funded their businesses

- 10% Took out small business loan
- 10% Received all funding from one investor
- 8% Received partial funding from investors
- 7% Received all funding requested from multiple investors
- 4% Didn’t receive any funding from investors

Most women found funding challenging, nearly two-thirds self-funded.
Most women feel that business challenges are equally difficult for both women and men. However, some believe that negotiating contracts and raising funding come more easily for men than women.
Women are undeterred from asking for advice as new and seasoned entrepreneurs, placing value in the advice of those that have come before them, typically other women. Before starting a business, 65 percent of female small business owners knew another small business owner and 91 percent of those solicited advice from other female business owners. The type of advice ranged from the challenges they faced and how they learned from them to the types of payments they accepted.

When asked to share the one piece of advice they would give to another woman who would like to start her own business, respondents had a lot to share.

Here are some of the highlights:

“Look confident, not desperate. Never entertain the thought that something will fail. Push through your adversities.”

“Finance yourself and keep as much equity as possible.”

“Be ready to work harder than most men and be alert.”

“Have a well thought out business plan and budget and stick to it during the first year.”

“I would encourage a woman to have 3-5 years of resources on hand and to make strategic business decisions.”

“Have a strong support network and make your presence known.”

“Never think you are the best, but rather embrace and empower other business owners. Or even collaborate.”

“Have faith in yourself because the men are in the woman’s world now.”

“Make sure you have enough funding backing up your business.”

Entrepreneurial Challenges and Advice for Atlanta Business Owners

Women who own businesses in Atlanta face unique challenges to the rest of the country. Thirty-seven percent of female founders reported not being able to grow as fast as they need as a top challenge, with developing an online presence (34%) and raising funding and capital (32%) coming in as the second and third highest challenges faced respectively. Although there is a large network of women business owners in the city, they still report building a support network (27%) as another top challenge, followed by keeping up with industry changes and trends (20%) and cybersecurity (17%).

Along with challenges, comes the interest in receiving advice to get through them, from women who have already built a successful business in the area. In Atlanta, 74 percent of respondents knew another female small business owner before they started their own business and 91 percent of those solicited female advice. Advice most often sought was focused on how to overcome challenges, and how to build a support team.

Methodology

Visa commissioned a survey of 650 female small business owners (400 nationwide and 250 Atlanta-based) to assess their attitudes toward entrepreneurship. The women small business study was conducted on behalf of Visa by independent research firm, Logica Research. The online survey took place in December 2018.

About She’s Next, Empowered by Visa

She’s Next, Empowered by Visa, builds off the success of Visa-supported programs focusing on small businesses, as well as female business owners. Recent examples include Visa’s sponsorship of the Great British High Street program in the United Kingdom and Visa’s Money is Changing marketing campaign in the United States. In addition to Visa’s efforts, the Visa Foundation made its first financial commitment of up to $20 million to Women’s World Banking.

She’s Next is supported by the Female Founder Collective (FFC)—a network of businesses led by women, supporting women—that was founded by Rebecca Minkoff in 2018 and quickly grew to over 3,000 members. From streamlining payment methods to linking women small business owners with like-minded peers and experts, Visa and FFC will together offer resources and opportunities for female entrepreneurs.

As a market leader in the small business segment in the United States, Visa provides a full suite of payment services designed for virtually every need, whether businesses are accepting payments from 3.3 billion Visa account holders worldwide or making secure, seamless payments to their own providers using Visa Business credit, debit or prepaid cards.

For more information on Visa’s small business solutions, please visit usa.visa.com.

As women, we have the power to shape and transform our communities—through our purchasing power and also through the leadership and employment opportunities we offer as business owners.

By joining forces with Visa, we will help build awareness of women-owned businesses, provide them with more opportunities and invest in women across the socioeconomic spectrum around the globe.
